

NEWS

Chris Sloan Discusses Nashville Technology Council Restructuring in the Tennessean

After the announcement by the Nashville Technology Council that it has named Microsoft account executive Bryan Huddleston as CEO and president of the 400-member organization, Chris Sloan, a board member of the Nashville Technology Council, comments in the Tennessean on the tech council converting its workforce development initiative into a 501c3 nonprofit, allowing it to accept grant money and other funding that was previously not possible as a 501c6 organization. Mr. Sloan notes the restructuring also allows businesses to make tax-deductible contributions to the group and is expected to increase funding capabilities.