Frederick N. Salvo III is an experienced litigator who represents clients in several industries including financial services, energy, real estate, and insurance.

Mr. Salvo represents clients in the financial services, energy, real estate, and insurance industries and advocates on their behalf in litigation, regulatory, and stakeholder proceedings throughout the Southeast and nationally. He regularly represents national, regional, and local banks, finance companies, loan servicers, investors, asset management firms, real estate owners, developers, and related financial institutions in commercial and consumer financial services litigation. His work includes the defense of claims under federal statutory schemes and a litany of state law claims, as well as the enforcement of creditor's rights under notes, deeds of trust, financing agreements, lease agreements, receivership proceedings, and representing their interests in the negotiation of loan workout and modification agreements and short sales.

Mr. Salvo also regularly represents title underwriters in large title agent defalcations, coverage disputes under various title insurance policies, claims under closing protection letters (CPLs), and various extra contractual claims. His work in this area often also involves related regulatory, criminal, and bankruptcy proceedings. His real estate litigation experience also includes the representation of developers and real estate owners in significant real estate title matters, including large-scale projects involving multiple parcels and title defects. In addition, he has experience with significant fiduciary litigation matters representing corporate and individual fiduciaries and beneficiaries in estate and trust-related disputes. His practice also includes ERISA and non-ERISA related benefits litigation, including claims related to allegedly improper administration of certain employee welfare benefit plans.

In the energy sector, Mr. Salvo's experience includes representing interests in the stakeholder processes within regional transmission organizations (RTOs) and independent system operators (ISOs). He has experience representing interests within the Midcontinent Independent System Operator (MISO) stakeholder process and related forums, including providing guidance and advice related to a variety of issues, such as cost allocation, resource adequacy, energy market design, accreditation, reliability requirements, and demand models. His work in this area also includes review of compliance and regulatory filings before the United States Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC) and federal courts.

Mr. Salvo also has significant experience with business and tort litigation matters, including matters involving non-competition agreements, trade secrets, protection of proprietary information, and asset purchase agreements. He also has experience litigating high exposure personal injury matters for corporate clients, such as housing authorities, rental car companies, freight brokers, health care practices, property management firms, automobile manufacturers, and property developers frequently addressing novel issues involving federal preemption, sovereign immunity, and statutes of limitations.

Mr. Salvo clerked under Chief United States Magistrate Judge John M. Roper, Sr. from 2001 to 2002, and he completed an internship with United States Magistrate Judge S. Allan Alexander in 2000 and 2001.
