NLRB JOINT EMPLOYER STATUS

In July, the National Labor Relations Board (NLRB) Division of Advice announced that a franchisor could be designated as a joint employer of its franchisees’ employees. IFA is fighting this dangerous assertion because it is unlawful and will harm job growth, the economy and locally-owned franchise small businesses in every state.

Franchisees have been an important driver of the economic recovery since the Great Recession, growing faster than non-franchise businesses during this period. More than 770,000 franchise businesses operate in over 100 different business categories such as restaurants, hotels, business services, retail stores, real estate agencies and automotive centers. Franchise businesses employ more than 8 million workers and contribute roughly $494 billion to the U.S. Gross Domestic Product, or 3.1% of total private sector GDP.

The Service Employees International Union (SEIU) is leading organized attacks against franchising. This well-financed, national campaign against franchising by SEIU is a desperate, special-interest ploy to replenish the union’s dwindling coffers and membership. The labor unions’ multi-pronged attack at the local, state and national levels include having the federal government declare entire franchise systems as a single unit rather than the collection of separate, small business owners they actually are. The SEIU wants to undermine the franchise business model so it can more easily unionize entire franchise systems, as it is much more difficult for unions to organize thousands of independent small businesses under the current regulatory system.
Key Points:

• The NLRB Division of Advice ignored decades of regulatory, legal and legislative precedent that make it clear franchisees are separate businesses from their franchisors. Their legally binding contracts also make this clear.
• A franchise is an agreement or license between two independent businesses. Many franchise businesses with familiar brand names are actually locally-owned and operated small businesses that pay an initial fee and ongoing royalties to use the trademarks of the franchisor.
• Franchisors are responsible for brand standards and quality, while franchisees are responsible for day-to-day operations and employment decisions that include hiring, firing, wages and benefits, and working conditions.
• Franchisees have invested their capital in the business and stand to lose equity in their businesses if their franchisors are deemed joint employers.
• Disputes over liability will only produce costly litigation for both the franchisee and franchisor.

THE ASK: “Will you sign a letter to the NLRB’s General Counsel, asking for the rationale and the relevant facts considered to make the determination that McDonald’s can be a joint employer with its franchisees?”

FRANCHISING

Building local businesses, one opportunity at a time.
FAQ’s: WHY IT MATTERS AND WHAT TO DO NOW

If the NLRB General Counsel succeeds in changing the joint employer standard, how will that affect traditional franchise businesses?

- When joint employer status is established, both entities may be liable for the other’s unfair labor practices, including unlawful discipline or discharge of employees under the National Labor Relations Act.
- A new joint employer standard may make it easier for unions to organize multiple franchisees of a single franchisor.
- A new joint employer standard will increase the likelihood of union “corporate campaign” tactics against national franchisors, in order to pressure franchisees.
- A new joint employer rule could impose new bargaining obligations on franchisors and could also give unions the right to strike or picket at any franchise system location, not just the location where a dispute arises.
- Faced with potential liability for their franchisees’ employment decisions, franchisors may be forced to exercise operational control over all the employment and human resource decisions of franchisees, undermining the franchise business model.

WHAT SHOULD FRANCHISORS AND FRANCHISEES DO NOW?

Right now, the old joint employer standard continues to be the law. It is up to the five members of the NLRB itself to make any official change. But the General Counsel’s decision to issue a complaint against one of the country’s leading franchisors should serve as a “wake up call” for all franchise businesses. At a minimum, franchise businesses should monitor this situation closely through organizations like the IFA. Here are some other suggested action items:

- Audit franchise practices to minimize factors showing “indirect control” over employee working conditions in the franchisor/franchisee relationship, where possible.
- Review franchise agreements to be sure they expressly give franchisees control over their employees’ terms and conditions of employment.
- Limit exposure of franchisee employees to franchisor representatives. Franchisor managers should primarily interact only with the franchisee’s managers.
- Monitor NLRB rulings for the latest directives provided by the agency.
- Speak out! Through the International Franchise Association’s Franchise Action Network program to help make the case against changing the joint employer standard at the NLRB and in Congress.

Timeline of Joint Employer announcement:

- David Weil issues Fissured Industries announcing the attack on the model. Weil appointed as DOL Wage & Hour Chief in 2014 on party-line vote in Senate.

- In 2013, multiple Unfair Labor Practice charges (ULPs) are filed against MCD and franchisees in New York and Chicago and elsewhere alleging joint employment.

- In November 2013, regions investigate the claims and send to Division of Advice as to how to proceed.

- On April 30, 2014, the NLRB invited amicus briefs on whether the Board should adopt a new joint-employer standard in Browning-Ferris Industries. The case addresses whether Browning-Ferris (a non-franchise waste management company) should be considered a joint employer with Leadpoint, a staffing services company, in a union representation election. The Board’s current standard deems businesses joint employers only when they share direct and immediate control over essential terms and conditions of employment including hiring, firing, discipline, supervision and direction.

  - On June 26th, Richard Griffin, NLRB General Counsel, filed his amicus brief in the Browning Ferris case, which may well illuminate the underlying rationale behind the complaints issued against McDonald’s naming them as joint employers. There, the General Counsel asserts that the Board should abandon its “narrow” joint-employer standard and “return” to the broader “traditional” approach. Mr. Griffin believes companies may effectively control wages by controlling other variables in the business. He moves the analysis away from day-to-day control over employment conditions to operational control at the system-wide level. He would find joint employment based on direct control, indirect control, potential control and when “industrial realities” make the company a necessary party to meaningful collective bargaining.

  - In response to Griffin’s amicus, IFA submitted an amicus brief, arguing against applying the broader indirect control and industrial realities test to franchise companies due to the negative economic consequences this would have on small business franchisees.

- July 29 – NLRB General Counsel announced it was issuing complaints against McDonald’s franchisees and their franchisor, McDonald’s, USA, LLC, alleging that they violated the rights of employees. The General Counsel announced that 181 cases had been filed since November 2012. 68 cases were found to have no merit, 64 cases were still pending investigation, and 43 cases were found to have merit and a complaint was authorized.

- Between July 29 and Dec. 19 - Additional charges were filed, bringing the total number of cases to 291 since November 2012.

- Dec. 19 – The General Counsel issued formal complaints against McDonald’s franchisees and their franchisor, McDonald’s USA, LLC, as joint employers. Of the 291 charges filed since November 2012, 86 cases have been found meritorious and complaints will issue on those cases. 11 cases were resolved and 71 cases remain under investigation.

- Given these numbers, it appears that 123 cases have been dismissed, but the Board did not announce the total number. (86 complaints were authorized, 11 cases “resolved” or settled, and 71 are currently under investigation – 291 – 168=123).

Next Steps regarding McDonald’s complaints:

- So far, the General Counsel issued 13 complaints involving 78 charges. More complaints will issue. The NLRB consolidated hearings in three Regional locations in the Northeast, Midwest and West.

- The initial litigation will begin on March 30, 2015 in Manhattan. Subsequent hearings will be held in Chicago and Los Angeles. The Board has not scheduled many of the hearings, perhaps because it hopes that litigation will not be necessary after litigation in the initial cases.

- After the initial litigation in front of the Administrative Law Judge (ALJ), the parties will file briefs and the ALJ will issue a proposed decision.

- That decision may be appealed to the NLRB in Washington D.C.

- During the appeal, interest parties may file a motion to file Amicus briefs.

- The Board’s decision is subject to appeal to federal district court where the unfair labor practice occurred, or in the District of Columbia.

- Interested parties may again request to file Amicus briefs at this stage. Ultimately, the case may be appealed to the U.S. Supreme Court. The Board may enforce its decision during the appeal process or may choose to stay its decision on appeal or the appeals court may issue a stay, if requested. This process will take years.
