INDEPENDENT CONTRACTOR V. EMPLOYEE
Recent Developments With FedEx

• Long-running dispute with drivers in California.
• 2014 Ninth Circuit ruling – FedEx misclassified drivers as independent contractors.
• June 2015- Proposed settlement creates a $228 Million fund to resolve 2,000+ claims.
Recent Developments With Uber

- June 2015 - California Labor Commissioner’s Office rules that an Uber driver was an employee rather than an independent contractor
- Commissioner ordered Uber to reimburse the driver’s expenses (totaling over $4K)
- Other state labor commissions have declined to follow suit, but the California ruling sent shockwaves throughout the “sharing economy” and beyond
- The ruling was widely reported in the national media and discussed in countless blogs and social media posts
O’Conner v. Uber Technologies (N.D. Cal.)

- Proposed class action of Uber drivers challenging their status as independent contractors
- March 2015 - Court denies Uber’s motion for summary judgment, which means a jury will decide whether drivers were properly classified as independent contractors
- September 1, 2015 – Court grants drivers’ motion to certify a class, but limits scope of class to California
- The case is primarily about unpaid tips and unreimbursed expenses, but most issues in the case hinge on the drivers’ status as employees versus independent contractors
Why Should I be Concerned?

• In the last two years, the U.S. Department of Labor's Wage and Hour Division and states have recovered $18.2 million in back pay for almost 20,000 employees who were wrongly classified as independent contractors.

• U.S. and State Tax Gap and Social Security Funding Issues

• The Agencies are talking to each other.

• July 15, 2015 Administrator’s Interpretation
Roadmap

- What are the risks if I improperly classify someone as an independent contractor?
- Who qualifies as an independent contractor?
- If I just make this person an independent contractor, I don’t have to worry about the Affordable Care Act, right?
- If I sent this person a Form 1099-MISC each year and don’t withhold payroll taxes, they’re an independent contractor, right?
- How do I make sure I don’t improperly classify someone as an independent contractor?
Risks of Misclassification

- Fines under the tax laws for unpaid income taxes and social security (personal liability)
- Unemployment benefits and fines for unpaid taxes to the State
- Liability for failure to obtain workers’ compensation coverage
- ERISA obligations for failure to provide employee benefits
- Violation of Federal Employment Authorization Verification (I-9 forms) requirements
Risks (cont’d)

- Violation of Mississippi’s E-verify requirement
- Liability under the Affordable Care Act for failure to provide insurance or for using independent contractors to avoid the 50 FTE requirement
- Liability for unpaid wages and overtime (personal liability/double damages)
- Violation of record-keeping requirements
- Loss of intellectual property rights
- Unexpected liability to third parties for torts and insurance issues
Risks (cont’d)

• Application of federal and state anti-discrimination laws

• Failure to provide required leave under the Family Leave Act or potential multiple violations if independent contractors are used to stay under the 50 employees requirement (personal liability/double damages)
Myths about Who is an Independent Contractor

1. The worker bears the responsibility for determining whether he or she is an independent contractor.

2. A person who works for more than one employer is an independent contractor.

3. All temporary workers are independent contractors.
Who is an Independent Contractor?

- Common law agency test
- IRS 20 factor test
- Economic realities test
- Hybrid
What is the “Common Law” Rule?

• An employer/employee relationship exists if the person contracting for the service has a right to control and direct both the results of the services and means by which those results are achieved.
IRS 20 Factor Test

- Instructions
- Training
- Integration
- Services Rendered Personally
- Hiring Assistants
- Continuing Relationship
- Set Hours of Work
- Full-Time Availability
- Work Done on Premises
- Order or Sequences Set
- Reports

- Payments
- Expenses
- Tools and Materials
- Investment
- Profit or Loss
- Works for More than One Person or Firm
- Offers Services to General Public
- Right to Fire
- Right to Quit
U.S. Department of Labor - Administrator’s Interpretation No. 2015-1 (July 15, 2015)

• Subject: “Application of the Fair Labor Standards Act’s Suffer or Permit Standard in the Identification of Employees Who Are Misclassified as Independent Contractors”

• Administrator David Weil doubles down on DOL’s ongoing efforts to combat independent contractor misclassification and provides “additional guidance” for deciding who is an employee

• After noting DOL’s long standing six-part “economic realities” test, Administrator Weil defines the ultimate goal as “determin[ing] whether the worker is economically dependent on the employer (and thus its employee) or is really in the business for him or herself (and thus and independent contractor).”

• Available at: www.dol.gov/whd/workers/Misclassification/AI-2015_1.pdf
What Has Changed?

• In Administrator Weil’s opinion, the DOL’s new guidance does not change the legal landscape; it is just another installment in an ongoing DOL initiative.

• Indeed, the DOL announced back in 2010 that it would target the “growing problem” of independent contractor misclassification.

• September 2011 - DOL and IRS enter a Memorandum of Understanding to coordinate their efforts to combat independent contractor misclassification.

• Labor departments in 25 states have entered similar Memorandums of Understanding with DOL (AK, AL, CA, CT, CO, FL, HI, IA, ID, IL, KY, LA, MA, MD, MN, MO, MT, NH, NY, RI, TX, UT, WA, WI, WY).
DOL Misclassification Initiative (2010)

• “The misclassification of employees as … independent contractors, presents a serious problem for affected employees, employers, and to the entire economy.”

• “Misclassified employees are often denied access to critical benefits and protections – such as family and medical leave, overtime, minimum wage and unemployment insurance – to which they are entitled.”

• “Employee misclassification also generates substantial losses to the Treasury and to Social Security and Medicare funds, as well as to state unemployment insurance and workers compensation funds.”
Things Have Indeed Changed

- DOL’s new emphasis on “economic dependence” and its bold statement that “most workers are employees under the Fair Labor Standards Act” should embolden DOL to more aggressively combat independent contractor misclassification
- Courts may not agree with DOL’s new interpretation, but employers simply must recognize that the independent contractor classification is in the DOL’s crosshairs
- DOL’s new economic dependence analysis must be considered as an overarching consideration when reviewing the more familiar economic realities test
The Economic Realities Test (Six Parts)

1. Is the work an integral part of the employer’s business?
   - The thought here is that workers are more likely to be employees of a company if they perform the company’s primary work
   - Independent contractors, by contrast, are more likely to provide ancillary services to the company
   - Example: In a construction company, framers most likely are employees, but software developers who design software to tracks bids properly may be classified as independent contractors

2. Does the worker’s managerial skill affect the worker’s opportunity for profit or loss?
   • Independent contractors in business for themselves can make management decisions (such as hiring an assistant, purchasing materials, advertising) which can directly affect their opportunity for profit or loss
   • Employees, by contrast, do not have this ability, and their opportunities to earn more (or less) depend almost entirely on the amount of work provided by their employer, which does not depend on the employees’ managerial skills
3. How does the worker’s relative investment compare to the employer’s investment?
   • All employees make minimal investments in their jobs; the key to this factor is to compare the worker’s investment in the business to the employer’s investment
   • Independent contractors typically make capital investments to such a degree that they can operate as independent businesses
4. Does the work performed require special skill and initiative?
   • This factor is the source of much confusion. According to the DOL (and some courts), “special skill” does not mean the technical skills required to perform a particular job since many employees are skilled laborers.
   • The DOL interprets this factor to require “special skill and initiative” that permits independent contractors to operate as economically independent businesses.

5. Is the relationship between the worker and the employer permanent or indefinite?
   • The concept here is that true independent contractors generally do not work for one company for extended periods of time; instead they are engaged for set periods of time, typically on a project basis
   • As a result, an exclusive independent contractor relationship lasting for years is a common misclassification red flag
   • On the other hand, short duration seasonal work does not equate to an independent contractor relationship

6. What is the nature and degree of the employer’s control?
   • Historically, courts have considered this the most important of the six factors, but the DOL disagrees
   • Here, the DOL places much emphasis on their new economic dependence consideration. They argue:
     • A worker must control meaningful aspects of her work
     • Her control must be more than theoretical, she must actually exercise it
Red Flag Factor

Form 1099 to an Individual
Other Red Flags

• Do you have employees performing essentially the same duties as your independent contractors?
• Have you classified the independent contractor as an employee in the past while she was performing essentially the same tasks as she is now?
• If the answer to either of these questions is YES, you may need to reconsider your classification of the worker as an independent contractor
What does this mean?

Can I just classify them as independent contractors to avoid the ACA?

No.
Can I just classify them as independent contractors to avoid liability for Title VII or the FMLA?

No.
If I sent this person a Form 1099-MISC each year and don’t withhold payroll taxes, they’re an independent contractor, right?

No.
How to Avoid Misclassification Issues

- Have a well-drafted contract.
- Use specific language to convey intent.
- Ask for invoices and an EIN.
- Think about the amount of control you have over that person.
- Hire incorporated corporate entities, not individuals whenever possible.
- Require a business license.
The Value of Written Agreements

- Written agreements between an employer and independent contractor define the relationship and avoid confusion between the parties.
- Further, an accurate independent contractor agreement can assist your efforts to defend the classification.
- Nevertheless, a written agreement will not control if the classification is challenged; what the worker actually did for the employer is what matters.
- Written agreements, therefore, must be accurate.
Conduct a Self-Audit … Soon

• Don’t wait for a DOL investigation or a lawsuit; perform a proactive self-audit of your independent contractor relationships.
• Use the six-part economic realties test, but also consider the new factors discussed in the Administrator’s Interpretation discussed above.
• We strongly recommend having your counsel perform (or at least coordinate) the audit to maintain the attorney-client privilege.
• Immediately reclassify anyone whose classification presents a close question.
